In the Fisher King, he tells the story of a king who is wounded in his feeling function. In modern terms, we would say he is damaged in his ability to experience emotions -- to relate to other people. He has respite from his pain only when he is fishing, hence the name. He lives in the castle of the holy grail.

In 1275, the Fisher King and the hermit followed the Lady of the Lake to Lac Célay in Toussaint. He most likely transported common, but worthy folks on the island to the Lady's islet, and collected herbs. He was not a very talkative guy, and managed to communicate mostly with a series of Mhm's and Uhm's, except for when motivated to talk.
